The evening before election, a diverse group of the people, with a wide field of ideas and concerns gathered outside of Reunion Arena in Dallas to rail outside while Bush rallies inside.

Some members of the Dallas chapter of Iranians for peace and justice participated in the rally to raise their voice to stop the current war in Iraq and the next war targeting Iran.

The protesters gathered at downtown Dallas' Ferris Plaza. Then, they broke out the megaphones and unfurled huge, hand-painted signs declaring President Bush's administration as the "worst ever."

Then they took their message along Sports Street across from the arena. There were several hundreds protesters in the rally. The rally was peaceful and Dallas police reported no arrests.
